What is a sublicense for Parallels Remote Application Server?

- Parallels Remote Application Server

Information

A sublicense for Parallels Remote Application Server is a license with its own properties, created based on a Parallels Remote Application Server subscription or a permanent license.

Only an administrator of a business account can create sublicenses.

Sublicenses allow you, for example, to provide company subsidiaries with a Remote Application Server license for the number of users that they need, and you can manage the license at any time. You can also use a sublicense for activation of a test farm.

A sublicense has its own license key used for activation, its own expiration date and number of licenses. The licenses allocated to a sublicense are taken from the subscription.

You can only allocate a fixed amount of licenses to a sublicense, and they will not be available for the main subscription or other sublicenses.

© 2024 Parallels International GmbH. All rights reserved. Parallels, the Parallels logo and Parallels Desktop are registered trademarks of Parallels International GmbH. All other product and company names and logos are the trademarks or registered trademarks of their respective owners.